Good afternoon,

I have a specific question that I believe truly needs to be addressed and on record so that all can understand.

As we are all aware the Proswing project is a huge undertaking. The cost certainly is immense. I would like to understand the precautions Southeast will have in place to preserve the area should the project fall short midstream. I understand if it does not move forward before it starts the "Alienation" of the land would revert to its origin. However, if after all the trees and clearing of that area, they do not have the anticipated funds to complete the project what happens then? While there will be many rumors positive and negative, one of which I have heard (again a rumor) is there is a shortage of the necessary funds needed for the project. While I understand the project is looking for additional investors. While this may only be a rumor it brings up a good point with these trying times, how can we protect this area.

Please advise what measures are in place to safeguard and address concerns of the project not having enough funds or from being abandoned midstream. I am concerned about this project changing hands as other projects have or a change in use for that area.

I look forward to your response.
